

JABRA BT530 USB HEADSET

$190

AFTER THE RATHER fanciful dog-tag Jabra BT3030, Jabra's latest BT530 USB headset apparently empowers the professional yakker with yet another asset for their talking needs. Although, in a world of choices and competition, what gives this Bluetooth wonder an edge over its next best competitor?

Wireless Connectivity

Designed to blend in with the businessman's common code of conduct, the BT530 is decked in a matted black coating and comes with Ear hooks to ensure stability when worn. It also wears its silver-chromed dual mics proudly like that of a boy scout that's bestowed with an insignia.

Drowning out the Noise

Packed with Jabra's proprietor Noise Blackout Technology which cancels out unwanted noises, the BT530 easily allows an uninterrupted conversation even while being caught up in a noisy joint. We managed to get this set connected in under a minute, with minimal hassle. There wasn't much detectable background distortion even while conjunctively streaming music and speaking at the same time via mobile. With its custom-fit comfort Eargels, and thoughtful USB connector add-on for wireless chats (VoiP calls) via PC; we were impressed by its ability to last up to at least 4 hours for our test.

A road-warrior ready Bluetooth accessory that is also great for those discreet free-internet calls late at night. MW

LOVE Ability to silence out 'Black noise' (yeah!), dual wielding mics, PC wireless chatting, easy volume access

HATE Almost $200 dollars price tag
